Used Household Goods and Personal Effects

Documents Required

- Passport
- Import declaration
- Original bill of lading (OBL) / air waybill (AWB)
- Detailed and valued inventory

- Tax ID (Tax Service Office)
- Certificate of registration at Aruba's Population Register (the Census Office of Aruba)

Specific Information

- Persons having a primary residence abroad prior to entry for at least 12 consecutive months may qualify for a duty exemption.
 - A "primary residence" refers to the place of residence by the person for at least 185 days per calendar year due to personal or professional ties.
 - If a person does not have professional ties, the personal ties that show a close relationship between the person and the place of residence will be the decisive factor.
- An exemption on home furnishings may apply if the following conditions are met:
 - The household goods must have been used in the previous primary place of residence.
 - Import duties must be paid on new household goods;
 - The household goods are to be used for the same purpose in Aruba.
 - The household goods have been used outside of Aruba in accordance with the prevailing norms in that country.
 - Exemption is only granted to persons who were not yet considered residents of Aruba.
- Household goods imported using a duty exemption must be imported within 12 months after the normal place of residence has been transferred; this can be achieved in one or more shipments.

An extension may be requested to the Commissioner of Customs if more time is needed.
- If a request for exemption of import duties on the household goods shipment is rejected in whole or in part, the owner of the goods may appeal to the Commissioner of Customs within a period of 1 month after the rejection.
- The owner of the goods may also file an appeal to the Board of Appeals in Tax Affairs within 1 month after the owner of the goods has received the verdict from the Commissioner if the owner of the goods disagrees with it.
